

IS DĪPAMKARAŚRĪJÑĀNA A MĀDHYAMIKA?

Kaie MOCHIZUKI

1 Introduction

In the later Tibetan grub mtha' literature Dīpamkaraśrījñāna is classified into the Prāsaṅgika-Mādhyamika school of Indian Buddhism.¹ Recently Jundo Nagashima² also classifies him as such according to his own analysis of the *Satyadvayāvatāra*³ of Dīpamkaraśrījñāna and the Tibetan translation of the Madhyamakaratnoprādīpa attributed to Bhavya which was translated by Dīpamkaraśrījñāna. Of course most of his Mahāyāna works are compiled into the Mādhyamika section of the Tibetan Tanjur and he is said to have written not only the commentary⁴ to the Bodhicāryāvatāra of Śāntideva, but also two texts both named the Madhyamakopadeśa,⁵ so it may be correct to place him in the Mādhyamika school. But does this reflect his philosophical position in the history of the later Indian

1 For example, Grub mtha' thams cad kyi khungs dang 'dod tshul ston pa legs bshad shel gyi me long of Thu bkhan blo bzang chos kyi nyi ma and Grub pa'i mtha'i rnam par bzhang pa gsal bar bshad pa thub bstan lhun po'i mdzes rgyan of lCang skyā Rol pa'i rdo rje. See Chattopadyaya [1967: 395-396], Tachikawa [1973: 71-72], and Mimaki [1982: 29-30].

2 See Nagashima [2004]. He treats the interpretation on the two truths by Dīpamkaraśrījñāna, but his understanding is obviously based on the tantric idea. For example he mentions in his Caryāgītivṛtti that the ultimate truth (paramārthasatya) is related in the Vajrāsanavajragrati and the conventional truth (saṃvṛtisatya) is related in the Caryāgīti (Mochizuki [2006d]). Because the former is a tantric works, it is needed to consider his tantric idea in order to understand his interpretation on the two truths. He states his understanding on the two truths in the beginning of the Madhyamakopadeśa like this: "Conventionally, and dealing with all existences (dharma) as we see them from this side, all establishments like cause and effect are true, just as they appear. But in the ultimate, and correctly, if man examines and searches this conventional appearance for what it is, using the Great Proofs, he will find that there is nothing to hang onto – no, not so much as a hundred split tip of hair." See also Sherburne [2000: 360-361] and Mochizuki [2002b: 15 and 17].

4 Bodhisattvacāryāvatārabhāṣya. See Mochizuki [1998a and 2005a: 61-91].

5 The smaller is called Madhyamakopadeśa and the larger is called Ratnakarandodghāṭā-nāma-Madhyamakopadeśa. See Salen [1986], Mochizuki [2002b], and Miyazaki [1993].

Buddhism correctly?⁶

When I read his works in the Mādhyamika section or his small collection of the Tibetan Tanjur, I noticed that there are more citations from the Yogācāra literature than those of the Madhyamaka. In his most major text, the Bodhipathapradīpa, the section on the emptiness (śūnyatā) with the discriminating wisdom (prajñā) in the Mādhyamika idea is placed in the higher stage, but the calmness (śamatha) which arises from the meditation is needed to get the wisdom, and further he places the tantric teaching in the last stage. In its own commentary he mentions Ratnākaraśānti and the Suvarṇadvīpa (gSer gling pa⁷) as the teachers of the Yogācāravijñaptimātravādin and Bodhibhadra as the teacher of Mādhyamika. And about half of his texts and translations are compiled into the Tantric section of the Tibetan Tanjur. Therefore his ideas are an intermingling of those of the Madhyamaka, the Yogācāra, and the Tantra.

In this paper I will try to consider his philosophical standpoint on the basis of the relationship with his teacher Bodhibhadra⁸ and his Mādhyamika idea called “the great Madhyamaka”⁹ in his texts.

2. Bodhibhadra in Dīpamkaraśrījñāna’s text

In the biographies of Dīpamkaraśrījñāna, Bodhibhadra¹⁰ is mentioned as one of his masters of the Mādhyamika school.¹¹

⁶ See Yamaguchi [2004: 225-231].

⁷ Dharmapāla (Chos skyong) or Dharmakīrti (Chos grags). See Ruegg [1981: 110-111] and Saito [2003: 29-30].

⁸ See also Ruegg [1981: 109-113].

⁹ We need to judge with prudence whether this “great Madhyamaka” is same as that of Dol po pa Shes rab rgyal mtshan (1292-1361). Both of them are influenced by the Dharmadhatustava of Nāgārjuna and their interpretation of the Mādhyamika idea is similar, but there is no reference to Dīpamkaraśrījñāna in the works of Dol po pa. According to sTag tshangs pa (1405-), the Tibetan founder of “the Great Madhyamaka” is Nyi ma grags (1055-). See Matsumoto [1997: 215 and note 12]. On “the great Madhyamaka” in the works of Dol po pa, see also Broido [1989], Stearns [1999], and Hopkins [2006].

¹⁰ We cannot get enough information on his life. In the Tibetan Tanjur there are five works attributed to him, the Yogalakṣaṇasatya (D. No. 2458, Zi 132b5-134a3; P. No. 3286, Tshi 166b1-168a3, No. 5450, Gi 186b1-188a1), the Jñānasārasamuccayanibandhana (D. No. 3852, Tsha 28a3-45b4; P. No. 5252, Tsha 31a3-53a3), the Samādhisambhāraparivarta (D. No. 3924, Ki 76b7-91a6; P. No. 5319, A 87a-100a8), the Bodhisattvasamavaravidhi (D. No. 3967, Gi 239a4-241b6, No. 4491, 43b5-46a7; P. No. 5362, Khi 276b6-280a4, No. 5404, Gi 54a5-57b1), and the Bodhisattvasamavarimśakapañjikā (D. No. 4083, Hi 154b3-217b5; P. No. 5584, I 213a2-251a2). Though these texts without the last are compiled into the Mādhyamika section of Tanjur, the last is a sub-commentary to the Śāntarakṣita’s text which is a commentary to the Candragomin’s text.

¹¹ Eimer [1979: 012, 034, 048].

Dīpaṁkaraśrijñāna mentions in his own commentary to the Bodhipathapradīpa [= BPP] that he learned the Mādhyamika doctrine from the current teacher, Bodhibhadra. But we cannot trace their direct relationship to Bodhibhadra's texts, therefore I will consider it from Dīpaṁkaraśrijñāna's texts.

In the opening dedicated verse of the Bodhimārgadīpapañjikā which is a commentary to his main work, the Bodhipathapradīpa, he relates as follows:

- 1: Bowing down in sincerity to the gurus; Maitreya, Asaṅga, [my] Guru the Suvarṇadvīpa, Mañjughoṣa, Śāntideva and Bodhibhadra, then I write this commentary just like sunlight.¹²

He refers to the founders of the Yogacāra school and his direct teachers, but not Nāgārjuna, the founder of the Mādhyamika school. He explains this verse as follows:

- 2: Here the instruction of scattered drops should be gathered following both the gurus and the sutras, faced with my disciple of royal family, Byang chub 'od and my long-standing disciple, Tshul khrims rgyal ba, who repeatedly request the drops of instruction like nectar or honey from the holy guru, the Suvarṇadvīpa, and the glorious reverend Bodhibhadra who are like a bottle of jewels.¹³

Dīpaṁkaraśrijñāna relates here that he transmitted the teaching both of his gurus, Bodhibhadra and the Suvarṇadvīpa to his two disciples, Byang chub 'od and Tshul khrims rgyal ba. He also explains "teachers" in BPP 23-24¹⁴ he relates as follows:

12 Bodhimārgadīpapañjikā (= BMDP), D. No. 3948, Khi 241a5-6, P. No. 5344, Ki 277b7-8, Sherburne [2000: 22-23]:

14 Eimer [1978: 106]:

*bla ma rnams kyis bstan pa yi //
yang dag thabs ni bshad par bya //*

3: “Teachers (bla ma rnams)” in the root verse are the glorious reverend Bodhibhadra, the reverend [from] Suvarṇadvīpa and so on.¹⁵

Further in the commentary to BPP 46¹⁶ on the enlightenment thought (cittotpāda) he relates as follows:

4: Then the excellent Ācārya Nāgārjuna, the excellent Ācārya Asaṅga and the excellent Ācārya Śāntideva are all in accord on this manner to wish the enlightenment and my recent teacher the glorious reverend Bodhibhadra and the reverend [from] Suvarṇadvīpa also follow their system and further I follow these reverend teachers, therefore you should understand that my presentation of the small manners of ritual which I composed at the request of a group of my disciples is the opinions of Ārya Nāgārjuna, Ārya Asaṅga and Ārya Śāntideva.¹⁷

Because he refers Bodhibhadra as “my recent teacher (da ltar bdag gi bla ma)”, Bodhibhadra seems to be a contemporary teacher of Dīpamkaraśrījñāna and this means that the latter directly learned Buddhism from the former.

Next in the commentary to BPP 79-82¹⁸ on the monastic rule (prātimokṣa) he refers to Bodhibhadra and cites his Bodhisattvasaṃvaraṇīśakapāñjikā which is a commentary to the Samvaraṇīśakavṛtti of Śāntarakṣita. The opposite criticizes him that Dīpamkaraśrījñāna refers to superior persons who are looking for the highest enlightenment in BPP 20-22¹⁹ but here only the person with the monastic rule is fit for the vow of Bodhisattva. He answers to it, citing this text as follows:

5: This meaning is related in the *Bodhisattvasaṃvaravimśakapañjikā*²⁰ by [my] glorious reverend Guru, Bodhibhadra as follows:

The vows of the monastic rule have become the bows of members of the bodhisattva and should be known as a part of the whole. Therefore this means that those who have other vows of the monastic rule come to take the bodhisattva vows correctly and these words of practice also should be given. There is no other ritual to refrain from killing and so on, and they refrain also them. Though they became the fit vessel for taking the bodhisattva vows, [they] does not exist.²¹

Further, on the sorts of the monastic rule, he says that they are seven in BPP 83-86.²² On the basis of the Yogacārabhūmi compiled by Asaṅga he criticizes the opinion of the Abhidharma texts in which they are eight, and cites again the Bodhisattvasaṃvaravimśaka-pañjikā:

6: If man dislikes and doubts a great person like this [= Asaṅga], he will make himself ruined. It is also related in the *Bodhisattvasaṃvaravimśaka-pañjikā*²³ by [my] glorious reverend Guru, Bodhibhadra as follows:

And the vow of the obligation is taken in the seven kinds of the monastic rule. Those in the monastic life are five, namely bhikṣu, śramaṇa, bhikṣuṇī, [etc] and those in the lay life are two with a distinction between upāsaka and upāsikā. Because the practice of one day is not an ascetical practice, not adulterous and a nonsexual stoic, it is not taught as an unsuitavle practice of the monastic tule. Because he is a great guru who keeps the discipline of the bodhisattva scriptures and receives the instruction transmitted from Ārya Nāgārjuna and Ācārya Śāntideva, man should follow this great scholar.²⁴

Dīpaṃkaraśrījñāna understands Bodhibhadra as a follower not only of Asaṅga, the founder of the Yogācāra school, but also of Nāgārjuna, the founder of the Mādhyamika school. Based on Bodhibhadra's same text, Dīpaṃkaraśrījñāna explains not only the monastic rule of Śrāvakayāna in this section but also the obligation (saṃvara) of the perfect vehicle (pāramitāyāna) in the next section. He cites this same text five times here. At first he explains the ritual to receive the obligation of the bodhisattva without guru in BPP 95-98²⁵ and cites the *Maṇjuśrībuddhakṣetrālaṃkārasūtra*²⁶ in BPP 99-128.²⁷

7: Though in the Śikṣāsamuccaya the ritual to receive from a guru is related, I relate the ritual taking with guru on the basis of the chapter on ethics (śīlapaṭala) [in the Bodhisattvabhūmi] and the ritual without guru on the basis of the Śikṣāsamuccaya because I follow both method [of Asaṅga and Śāntideva] Śāntideva treats the whole sutra as a practice by three types of person. These are a higher practice in the great vehicle (mahāyāna), a middle practice and a lower practice. On the higher practice he writes in the Śikṣāsamuccaya:

The obligation of the bodhisattva comes from Mahāyāna in detail.²⁸
And he says also in the Bodhicaryāvatāra:

There is no practice which the sons of the victor do not learn.²⁹
And the glorious Guru, Bodhibhadra, also says [in Bodhisattvasaṃvara-vimśakapañjikā]:³⁰

The basic practice of bodhisattva is summarized as a actual appearance like this. Further because the practice of bodhisattva is measureless and endless, therefore you should follow what is taught and know what became a fault and what do not.³¹

Further he cites the same text to explain the causes of forsaking the vow on basis of the manner of Asaṅga and Śāntideva:

8: The causes of forsaking the vow are, according to the explanation of Ārya Asaṅga, to forsake the wish for the great enlightenment and to be ensnared in great avarice. The former is to be weary of benefiting creatures, to think of going away from the enlightenment, and to make a wish to be a Śrāvaka, Pratyekabuddha and non-Buddhist. The latter are also to be shameless and regretless, to lose the thought without repentance and to give back the vow in the presence of anyone capable of understanding.³²

The explanation of Ācārya Śāntideva is not to abandon the fourteen damages related in the Śikṣāsamuccaya, namely the damage caused by Māra and the damage caused by not preserving the excellent teaching, and so on, and to injure mindfulness, not to acknowledge laziness, indifference and the moral fall and to be shameless and regretless. [My] guru also says in the Bodhisattvasaṃvaraṇīśakapañjikā:³³

[These are] not to acknowledge the basis of practice, not to remember it, to mistake it and not to respect it.³⁴

And on the benefits of discipline he cites the chapter on ethics in the Bodhisattvabhūmi of Asaṅga and the Śikṣāsamuccaya of Śāntideva and says:

9: They are related also in the Adyāśayasamcodana, the Praśāntaviniścaya-

The BMDP reads the first word of the citation from Bodhibhadra's text as "bslab pa", not "bslang ba" and this seems to be caused by the similarity of the Tibetan letters between both words. Therefore the scribe would have made a mistake to transcribe the Tibetan texts.

pratiḥārya, the Candrapradīpa and the Ratnameghasūtra. [My] guru also says in the Bodhisattvasaṃvaravimśakapañjikā.³⁵

If man acts like this, he will instantly cut off transmigration to the lower realm and not be reborn there.

And again:

He is not reborn in the lower realm, and even if he is reborn a hundred times, he does not experience severe suffering or become free from it and mature others when he stay there.³⁶

And he explains accomplishment of equipment for enlightenment by the obligation of discipline in the commentary to BPP 133-136³⁷ and cites the Bodhisattvasaṃvaravimśakapañjikā again:

10: By the word “those who are bound by vows” I indicate both the bodhisattva vow in the tradition of Ārya Asaṅga and the bodhisattva vow in the tradition of Ācārya Śāntideva. If you strive to go on the path of two great vehicles like this, you will accomplish both the equipments of merit and knowledge. Gurus relate that you will obviously get the perfect enlightenment. [My] guru also says in the Bodhisattvasaṃvaravimśakapañjikā:³⁸

These three practices of conduct are virtuous because to take and keep them correctly become good, benefit and happiness for one’s self and others. They are measureless because they comprise the measureless practice of bodhisattvas. They are useful because they accomplish the benefit and happiness of all creatures. Man should know that they have great effect because man gets the effect of the supreme and perfect enlightenment through them.³⁹

And in the conclusion of this section he cites the Bodhisattvasaṃvara-vimśakapañjikā again.

11: Therefore a yogin who does not practice day and night without any purpose has three perfect equipments. [My] guru says as follows [in the Bodhisattvasaṃvara-vimśakapañjikā]:⁴⁰

You will be in touch with happiness by means of three perfect equipments. These equipments are practice, intension and prior cause. Perfect equipments of practice are not to continue moral faults of body, speech and mind and to break sins. Perfect equipments of intension are to motivate oneself by intention of true teaching and not to motivate by untrue teaching like wrong livelihood. I will strive for great enlightenment, but not strive for worldly happiness. Perfect equipment of prior cause are to have made merit in previous lives, not to be impoverished in clothing, food and the necessities in this life and to be disposed to share them with others.⁴¹

In the section on the meditation (samādhi) by which man can have the superknowledges (abhi�ā) Dīpañkaraśījñāna cites the Samādhisambhāraparivarta of Bodhibhadra four times.⁴² He relates that the Buddha had accepted the equipment both of merit and knowledge to cause the superknowledges in BPP 137-140⁴³ and cites the Adyāśayasamcodanasūtra and the Samādhisambhāraparivarta in the commentary to BPP 141-144:⁴⁴

12: [My] guru also says in the Samādhisambhāraparivarta:⁴⁵

The bodhisattvas who have heard [the dharma] should refrain from preaching dharma. As long as they do not acquire the superknowledges, it is not taught [in the scriptures] to benefit others only by hearing [the dharma].

And it is also said in the same text:⁴⁶

Therefore the dharma should be not preach only by those who have heard many scriptures and they should benefit others only after acquiring the superknowledges.

And it is also said in the same text with its source:⁴⁷

Without acquiring the superknowledges, they are incapable of maturing disciples and will die. Ācārya Śāntideva also says [in the Bodhicaryāvatāra]:⁴⁸

Though creatures have various admirations and even the victor is not pleased by them, why can a bad man like me be so? Therefore give up the idea of pleasing the world.⁴⁹

Further he explains that man needs to accomplish calmness (śamatha) in order to cause these superknowledges and cannot accomplish the concentration (samādhi) without calmness in 157-160⁵⁰ and cites the Samādhisambhāraparivarta:

13: “The limbs of calmness” are ninefold, which begins with to be abandoned in the Samādhisambhāraparivarta written by [my] guru. The other passage [of the root verse] is easily understood. Because man can accomplish the calmness by spoiling these limbs, my reverend Guru Bodhibhadra says these nine limbs in his *Samādhisambhāraparivarta*⁵¹ as follows:

These are [1] to be abandoned, [2] preparation, [3] to be rejected, [4] to cut off desire, [5] to be depressed, [6] mindfulness of benefits, [7] diligence, [8] integrating, and [9] means of staying. Besides learning such limbs, man must remain them.

You should read the Samādhisambhāraparivarta itself for these meanings.⁵²

This same meaning is already related in his root verse, BPP 161-162,⁵³ and he cites it again:

14: Here I will write a little on the last meaning. [My] guru says in his Samādhisambhāraparivarta as follows:⁵⁴

If a man who acquires these eight limbs like this has provided himself with suitable food for location, suitable clothing for practice and suitable companions, he should settle in his mind.

And he says again:⁵⁵

If he does not settle his mind, he should strive for equipment of merit by reading the Prajñāpāramitāsūtra, [making] miniature conical figures molded of clay, circumambulations and so on.

And again:⁵⁶

A man who wishes to settle his mind should cultivate eight practices to avoid [the evils]. The opposition to them is [related in the Madhyāntavibhāga]⁵⁷ as follows:

The five moral faults are laziness, forgetfulness of instruction, dullness and agitation, non-application and application. These are the five moral faults.

The eight opposite applications to be avoided are also [related in it]:⁵⁸

[They are] this state, to remain in it, the cause, and the result, mindfulness to the object, awareness of dullness and agitation, and carrying out the avoiding.⁵⁹

Dīpamkaraśrijñāna cited here not only the Samādhisambhāra-parivarta of Bodhibhadra but also the Madhyāntavibhāga of Maitreya which is cited in the former. And he cites the *Madhyamakahṛdayakārikā*⁶⁰ of Bhavya to explain the word, “calmness” in BPP 163-164⁶¹ and cites the same text of Bodhibhadra again.

15: On “a single [object] which is suitable” [in BPP 163] it means calmness with signs or calmness without signs. It is also said in the Samādhisambhāraparivarta:⁶²

Here calmness is twofold: with signs and without signs. [Calmness] with signs is twofold: seen in [one's] internal and seen in external. Internal signs are two: objects on the body and objects depending on the body. The objects on the body are three: to grasp the body itself as the aspect of deva, to grasp the skeletons and so on as the impure aspect, and to grasp a trident and so on as a distinctive character. The objects depending on the body are five: to grasp the breath, to grasp the subtle character, to grasp the sperm, to grasp the limbs of light, and to grasp happiness and pleasure. External signs are two: the special and the ordinary. The special are two: the objects on the body and the objects on the words. These are limbs to enter calmness.

And calmness without signs are said in the same text:⁶³

Non-discursive knowledge of penetrative insight without signs arises from discriminating wisdom of calmness without signs.

And it is said in the same text:⁶⁴

It is recommended that non-discursive knowledge is developed from grasping calmness without signs depending calmness with signs. For if the place is firmly established, the afflictions are cleaned away and subdued by calmness, so it is a suitable cause for such a result.

And it is said in the same text:⁶⁵

I do not describe here how to cultivate, for fear of enlarging this text, but because it is right to depend the instruction experienced by a collect guru, and because the instruction to cultivate is hard to understand with letter and because it should be explained in detail after teaching calmness and penetrative insight.

Guru says that such a yogin who has achieved calmness will without doubt gain the five supereknowledges explained before.⁶⁶

Dīpamkaraśrījāna cites the Bodhisattvasaṃvaravimśakapañjikā of Bodhibhadra to explain the obligation of bodhisattva and continuously cites his Samādhisambhāraparivarta to explain calmness. Next he refers to Bodhibhadra again to explain the discriminating wisdom and emptiness (śūnyatā) as follows:

16: [My] glorious Guru Bodhibhadra says as follows:

The Victor has explained that the means (upāya) are all the equipments of virtue, starting with the perfection of giving, up to, but excluding, that of the discriminating wisdom (prajñā).

[This is] written down in my root verse [= BPP 181-184].⁶⁷

masters to explain the lineage of Śūnyatāvādin as follows:

17: Scholars of India are as follows: Explaining the category of teaching by Ārya Asanga, he taught the meaning of the perfection of insight as the mind-only (vijñaptimātra) and the present day Guru of Suvaruṇadvīpa and Guru Sāntipa (= Ratnākaraśānti) also intend the same meaning. Explaining the essence of the teaching by Ācārya Nāgārjuna, he taught the meaning of the perfection of insight as the meaning of the great Mādhyamika which transcends the existence and non-existence and this is related also in the tradition of other scholars. [My] Guru Bodhibhadra and the venerable Kusulupa also intend like this:

The nectar of Ārya Nāgārjuna fills Āryadeva, Candrakīrti, Bhavya and Śāntideva down to Bodhibhadra and a little is sprinkled on me.

And thus non-arising of all existence (dharma) is proved with the four great reasons and you should follow these former ācāryas and hold the teaching of the great Madhyamaka.⁶⁹

It is said here that Bodhibhadra is one of the Mādhyamika masters and Dīpamīkaraśījñāna succeeds the teaching of Nāgārjuna from him. And Dīpamīkaraśījñāna explains this lineage from Nāgārjuna to Bodhibhadra as follows:

18: Because Bodhibhadra is a guru who receives the excellence by instruction of Ārya Nāgārjuna, obtains authorization from Ārya Mañjughoṣa, acquires the superknowledges, understands simultaneously the intent of all the Tantras, Sūtras and Vinayas, succeeds consecutively from those who saw the truth, you should follow this [guru].⁷⁰

69 BMDP, D. Khi 280a4-7, P. Ki 323b4-324a1, Sherburne [2000: 236-237], Hakamaya [1989: 131-132], Nagashima [2004: 83]:

And he says this again in the following verse:

19: When you follow Bodhibhadra who belongs to the lineage of Ārya Nāgārjuna prophesied by the Omniscient One, you should not hold any excellence more.⁷¹

In these nineteen references to Bodhibhadra or his texts in the Bodhimārgadīpapañjikā, we can count twenty-two references to his name (nine from them are not his name but guru), eight citations from the Bodhisattvasaṃvaravimśakapañjikā and eleven citations from the Samādhisambhāraparivarta. The first is in the section of homage to gurus in the beginning of the text and the section of the discriminating wisdom where the author relates the lineage of the Mādhyamika teachers. The second is in the section of the obligation of bodhisattva and the third is in the section of the calmness.

Dīpamkaraśrījñāna refers to Bodhibhadra not only in the Bodhipathapradīpa 161-162, 181-184 and the Bodhimārgadīpapañjikā but also in his other small texts. In the Bodhisattvādhikarmikamārgāvatāradeśanā he refers to the Samādhisambhāraparivarta:

20: You should know the nine limbs related in the Samādhisambhāraparivarta written by Bodhibhadra and practice the yoga of calmness and insight.⁷²

And he refers to the same text also in the Mahāyānapathasādhana-varṇasaṃgraha 319:

21: Cultivate the yoga of calmness and insight which are the whole essence of means and wisdom. It is said that the entire reality of the mundane and supra-mundane are the fruit of those two.

In order to enter upon the unconditioned path and exercise the superknowledges, you should first produce the calmness. If the equipment for

You should correctly study the Samādhisambhāraparivarta and reject all false concentrations.⁷³

Dīpamkaraśrījñāna emphasizes the practice of meditation in which man should first acquire the calmness and this is formed on the basis of the teaching of Bodhibhadra. Though this introduction of the meditation from the Yogācāra system to the Mādhyamika style is seen also in the Bhāvanākrama of Kamaraśīla and Dīpamkaraśrījñāna seems to have read this text,⁷⁴ he refers not to Kamalaśīla but to the Samādhisambhāraparivarta of Bodhibhadra, who seems to be his direct teacher.

There is not a clear reference to him, but Dīpamkaraśrījñāna writes the Dharmadhātudarśanagīti on the basis of the Jñānasārasamuccayakārikā of Āryadeva and its commentary by Bodhibhadra. Though the first part of this text consists of citations from the Dharmadhātustava of Nāgārjuna, the second consists of citations from many philosophical texts in order to describe the teachings of Buddhist and non-Buddhist schools. The order begins with the Madhyamaka, the Yogācāra, the Vaibhāṣika, the Sautrāntika and ends with the non-Buddhist school that argues the spontaneity (ahetuvādin). Though it is based on the root verse of Āryadeva, he cites the summarized verses of the non-Buddhist idea from its commentary by Bodhibhadra.⁷⁵

3. The Great Madhyamaka

In the Bodhimārgadīpapañjikā the author mentions Ratnākaraśānti and the Suvarṇadvīpa as the teachers of the Yogācāra and Bodhibhadra as the teacher of Madhyamaka. At first I will consider how Ratnākaraśānti, one of the teachers of Dīpamkaraśrījñāna, understands the founder of the Mādhyamika school, Nāgārjuna.

He refers to the name of Nāgārjuna with that of Maitreya or Asaṅga who are both the founders of the Yogācāra school and emphasizes the identity of his philosophical opinion or the legitimacy of the lineage of the Mahāyāna idea.⁷⁶ And he cites Nāgārjuna to assert his philosophical opinion in the Yogācāra and writes the commentary to the Sūtrasamuccaya attributed to Nāgārjuna⁷⁷ and the texts called the Madhyamakālamkāravṛtti and the Madhyamakālamkāropadeśa.⁷⁸

Another of his teachers of Yogācāra, the Suvarṇadvīpa, writes the summaries to the Bodhicaryāvatāra of Śāntideva and Dīpamkaraśrījñāna also writes sub-commentary to them. But he refers not to the Mādhyamika idea in it but to the Abhisamayālamkārakārikā attributed to Maitreya. Because they cite not only the Yogācāra literature but also the Mādhyamika to assert their philosophical idea equally, it seems that they disregard the difference between the Yogācāra and the Madhyamaka or they try to mix them.

I found this also in the texts of Bodhibhadra who is mentioned as the teacher of the Madhyamaka. He writes not only a commentary to the text of Āryadeva but also a sub-commentary to the text of Candragomin compiled into the Yogācāra section of the Tanjur. His Samādhisambhāraparivarta compiled into the Mādhyamika section is written to assert the Yogācāra practice with citations from the Tantric texts. Bodhibhadra never rejects the opinion of the Yogācāra. What is in common between these teachers is that they write also Tantric texts or they are all Tantrist.

Can we call Dīpamkaraśrījñāna a Mādhyamika or did he himself recognize as a Mādhyamika when he wrote the Bodhipathapradīpa and its own commentary? If he recognized himself as a Mādhyamika, what is a Madhyamaka as he had intended? The clue to solve these questions seems to be the term, “the great Madhyamaka (dbu ma chen po)”.

Dīpamkaraśījñāna follows his teacher Ratnākaraśānti and calls Nāgārjuna and Asaṅga “two great vehicles”. This means that he does not recognize the philosophical system of the Madhyamaka as the opposition of the Yogācāra, but he accepts the Yogācāra and the Mādhyamika system in order to establish his original thought of the graded path (lam rim). And he calls it also “the great Madhyamaka”. Of course it is possible to assume that this adjective “chen po” is used not as the special meaning that indicates his original thought but as an ordinary modifier to “the Madhyamaka (dbu ma)”. But he seems to intend a special meaning with it. We can see usages of “the great Mādhyamaka (dbu ma chen po) in the Mahāyāna works attributed to him. Firstly it is said in the monastic rule section of the Bodhimārgadīpapañjikā:

22: Then, because the teaching of “the great Madhyamaka” in the Mahāyāna is confirmed, it is said:

No one does exist who does not become a vessel for the Mahāyāna like this. All creatures are the same family and have the embryo of a Tathāgata (tathāgatagarbha).

And it is said:

Fortune is not to be non-existent nor existent on the earth, but all creatures are to be Buddhas. Therefore you should not discourage yourself from achieving the perfect enlightenment.⁷⁹

The former citation is obviously based on the thought of Tathāgatagarbha and can develop into the thought that all creatures have the Buddha nature. Though he does not declare it, it is obvious that “the great Madhyamaka” is closely connected with the Tathāgatagarbha theory. Of course these usages are seen in the section on the discriminating wisdom where the author expresses his interpretation on the Mādhyamika thought. He explains the lineage of the Yogācā and that of the Madhyamaka and says:

23: Explaining the essence of the teaching by Ācārya Nāgārjuna, he taught the meaning of the perfection of the discriminating wisdom as the meaning of the great Mādhyamika which transcends the existence and non-existence and this is related also in the tradition of other scholars.⁸⁰

The first two topics on the perfection of the discriminating wisdom and the transcendence of the existence and non-existence seem to be the basic opinion of the Madhyamaka, but they are seen not only in the Yogācāra texts like the Madhyāntavibhāgakārikā but also in the Tantras like the Mahāvairocanābhisaṃbodhiśūtra and the Guhya-samājatantra. The author obviously acknowledges this and says that “the great Madhyamaka” is related also in the Tantras.

In order to indicate that these words of Nāgārjuna are succeeded to the Mādhyamika masters after Āryadeva he says in the verse:

24: And thus non-arising of all existence (dharma) is proved with the four great reasons⁸¹ and you should follow these former ācāryas and hold the teaching of “the great Madhyamaka”.⁸²

The author mentions that non-substantiality (niḥsvavdhāba) of all existence is proved by the four great reasons like non-arising and this follows the tradition of the Madhyamaka, but does not refer the definition of the meaning of the “the great Madhyamaka”. He mentions the reason not to refer to it:

25: Here we simply mention that the doctrinal view of “the great Madhyamaka” is like this and I do not write the doctrinal views in details because I give a brief synthesis to those who want to practice yoga, so I say [in the root verse]:

⁸⁰ BMDP, D. Khi 280a5-6, P. Ki 323b6, Sherburne [2000: 236-237]:

chos rnams thams cad skye med bsgrub byas te // sgong gyi slob dpon rnams kyi rjes 'grangs nas //
dbu ma chen po'i grub mthar gnas par bya //

I will explain the meaning of the meditative realization (bhāvanā).⁸³
The last usage of this term in the same text is like this:

- 26: Transcending views like existence or non-existence, rejecting continuance and discontinuance and being free from cognition and object of cognition, this is the scriptural system of “the great Madhyamaka”.⁸⁴

We may think that this is based on the Madhyamakakārikā of Nāgārjuna, but this is also seen in the Madhyāntavibhāgakārikā of Maitreya. Does he understand the difference between the interpretation on emptiness (śūnyatā) by the Madhyamaka and the Yogācāra?

Without the Bodhimārgadīpapañjikā we can see this term only in the Sūtrārthasamuccayopadeśa. He enumerates the fifty metaphors of the teachings for Bodhisattva and says in the thirty-seventh:

- 27: Something like darkness always exists in the object of “the great Madhyamaka”.⁸⁵

Dīpaṃkaraśrījñāna makes the proposition of “the great Madhyamaka” but seems to avoid the explanation for its definition. “Transcending views like existence or non-existence” would not mean an analysis of existence of things by the discriminating wisdom, but grasping substance of things that transcends expression with language by meditation. This thesis is expressed with the word “Madhya (dbu ma)”, but to explain the integration of the Madhyamaka idea and the Yogācāra idea.

4. Conclusion

In the Bodhimārgadīpapañjikā Dīpamkaraśrījñāna mentions Ratnākaraśānti⁸⁶ as one of his teachers on the Yogācāra idea and Bodhibhadra as that on the Mādhyamika idea. Though there is no reference to the store-consciousness (ālayavijñāna) or the three aspects of experience (trisvabhāva) in the texts of Dīpamkaraśrījñāna and those of Bodhibhadra, it is possible to pick up the Yogācāra idea on its meditation system from them and to say that their understanding on the emptiness is based on the interpretation of Yogācāra. All of them write not only Mahāyāna works but also Tantric works.⁸⁷ There seems to be an integration of the Madhyamaka idea and the Yogācāra idea in the basis of their philosophy in common.

Have these integrations of the philosophical systems between the different schools really succeeded in the history of Buddhist idea? Of course the idea of Dīpamkaraśrījñāna is widely accepted as the Lamrim idea in the Tibetan Buddhism on the one hand. But this integration seems to water down the criticism of the Madhyamaka on the other hand. It is clear from that his texts are hardly cited in the context on the Mādhyamika idea in the Indian nor Tibetan Buddhism.

In the end of this paper I would like to affirm that Dīpamkaraśrījñāna thinks of himself as the Mādhyamika and Bodhibhadra as his teacher on the Mahayamaka, but their philosophical systems are based on the Yogācāra, the Mādhyamika, and the Tantra in the order of the graded path to the enlightenment.
